

How to identify the opportunities available

Life used to be a lot simpler when searching for a job. For those who remember life before the internet the 'go to' would be the press. Jobs would be advertised once a week in the job supplement, one available in each city or town. Nationally you could head over to the national newspapers and again it would be on a specific day. Now things are very different.

Job Boards – To Name A Few

- CV Library
- Total Jobs / Job Site
- Reed
- Indeed

LinkedIn

- LinkedIn Adverts
- Companies Direct Posts
- Hiring Manager Posts
- Specific Groups

Key steps to manage all of this data

1. Set up watch dogs for all the job boards. Let the jobs come to you.
2. Set up google alerts for the job you are seeking.
3. Set up LinkedIn alerts when companies you are interested in start to hire.
4. On LinkedIn follow the hiring managers at the companies you want to work at.
5. Register your details with companies you are interested in working for. You should find a direct link on their careers page with which you can register your interest.
