

Managing and negotiating your offer

It's great when we receive that call to say that you are at the final stage, OR even better, "Congratulations, you have got the job!"

Depending on your personal circumstances it could be that:

- You are out of work - this is the offer you wanted; you want to jump at it
- You are out of work - you have this offer, but there is another offer you are waiting on – a preferred offer
- You are in employment and this is the new job you really want
- You are not sure it's the new job/company for you!

Before you go ahead and accept you need to take time and think about the following:

Check in with yourself

Set up watch dogs for all the job boards. Let the jobs come to you.

The Package

Is the package offered what you hoped it would be (or more) when you initially thought about moving?

Counter Offer

If you accept and hand in your notice, your current company may offer you something in an attempt to keep you, leaving you thinking:

- What do I do ?
- Do I ask for more from my new employer?
